Case Studies

The Plan:

Our client worked as an accounting clerk in the Rail Division of New Jersey Transit. Her job required her to park in a parking garage adjoining the office building where she worked. One morning, while crossing the parking lot to enter the building to go to work, she was struck by a car being driven at a high rate of speed by a bus driver, who was also on his way to work. She was thrown in the air and to the ground, sustaining a torn rotator cuff and herniated lumbar disks.

The Outcome:

Based on our long standing ability to handle cases for injured railroad workers under the Federal Employers Liability Act, we tried the matter in State Court in New Jersey asserting that the parking lot was unsafe we and achieved a jury verdict of $750,000.00, despite being willing to settle the case with the defendant pretrial for $60,000.00.
