

New Jersey Wage & Hour Facts

The following general guidelines provide an overview of the New Jersey Wage Payment Law and Wage and Hour Law. These guidelines address only the requirements of New Jersey law.

Federal law imposes additional requirements applicable to New Jersey employers, such as, for example, the revised overtime rules implemented under the federal Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), which took effect nationwide on August 23, 2004.

Employers must comply with the requirements of federal and state law, which are not always the same. Where federal and state law differ, employers must follow the rule that provides the greater benefit to the employee.

Basic Wage Standards

Effective January 1, 2015, the minimum wage in New Jersey will be increased to $8.38 per hour. Annual cost-of-living increases tied to the Consumer Price Index (CPI) will be calculated every September and applied to the minimum wage. The New Jersey Wage and Hour Law (the Law) contains various exceptions to these minimum rates, such as those for certain student workers and other employees, and employers should consult the Law to determine whether any apply to their employees.

Overtime pay at a rate of not less than one and one-half times the regular rate of pay is required after 40 hours of work in a workweek.

All wages are due to be paid on the regular payday for the pay period covered, which must occur at least twice during each calendar month for most employees. Paydays for certain executives, supervisors and other special classifications of employees may be less frequent than twice per month. Only certain deductions from wages lawfully may be made, and those deductions are set out in detail in the Wage Payment Law. Deductions cannot reduce gross pay below minimum wage.

While New Jersey law regulates employment practices such as the basic minimum wage and overtime pay standards, certain aspects of the employment relationship are not regulated. For example, the New Jersey Wage and Hour Law does not require:

1. Vacation, holiday, severance or sick pay
2. Meal or rest periods for workers 18 years of age or older
3. Time off for holidays or vacations
4. Pay raises or fringe benefits
5. Premium pay for weekend or holiday work
6. A discharge notice, reason for discharge or immediate payment of final wages to discharged employees

New Jersey law does not limit the number of hours (regular or overtime) in a day or days in a week an employee may be required or scheduled to work if the employee is at least 18 years old, with the exception of health care workers. New Jersey does impose certain restrictions on the overtime that may be worked by those in the health care field.

Exemptions

Some employees are exempt from minimum wage and/or overtime pay requirements. Because exemptions generally are narrowly defined, employers should carefully check the exact terms and conditions for each exemption under both federal and New Jersey law to determine whether employees are exempt from overtime requirements. The specific salary and duty requirements of the New Jersey exemptions are summarized on the reverse side of this page. Effective September 6, 2011, New Jersey's exemptions were amended to mirror the exemptions established under federal law, thereby allowing employees to meet the exemption tests under both.

Recordkeeping

New Jersey law requires employers to keep records on wages, hours and other items. Most of the information is of the kind normally maintained by employers in the ordinary course of business and in compliance with other laws and regulations. The records do not have to be kept in any particular form, and time clocks are not required. The following records, among others, must be kept for six years from the date of entry for all employees subject to the minimum wage and/or overtime pay requirements:

1. Name and home address, and, for employees under 18 years of age, birth date
2. Total hours worked each workday and each workweek
3. Total gratuities received by each employee receiving gratuities
4. Additions to wages
5. Total earnings, including the regular hourly wage, gross and net amounts with itemized deductions, and the basis on which wages are paid
