Introduction*

Registered broker-dealers (BDs) are subject to a variety of recordkeeping requirements that are promulgated and enforced by the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission (Commission or SEC), the various states, and self-regulatory agencies such as the Financial Industry Regulatory Authority (FINRA). These requirements have long been recognized as vital for customer protection, fraud prevention, and general regulatory activities. Thus, in a constantly evolving regulatory environment, failure to abide by recordkeeping requirements is not only a bad business practice, but will subject BDs to severe sanctions.

Section 17(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934,¹ as amended (Exchange Act), and its corresponding regulations under Rule 17a (17 C.F.R. § 240.17a-1 et. seq.) set forth the primary recordkeeping rules for BDs. Additionally, FINRA may also enforce Section 17(a) and impose its own recordkeeping requirements. See, e.g., FINRA Rule 3110 (requiring each member to make and preserve records in accordance with Rules 17a-3 and 17a-4). Further, state securities regulators often impose their own recordkeeping requirements, although Section 103 of the National Securities Markets Improvement Act of 1996² prohibits states from imposing requirements that are materially different from those of the Commission. Ironically, Section 17(a) does not provide for a private cause of action, despite its underlying customer protection purpose. See Touche Ross & Co. v. Redington, 442 U.S. 560, 560–61 (1979) which holds that Section 17(a) does not give rise to a private cause of action.

In any event, any discussion of BD recordkeeping requirements begins with Exchange Act Rules 17a-3³ and 17a-4,⁴ which operate as the touchstone of the Commission's recordkeeping framework. Together, they identify the records that a firm must create and preserve in addition to the format, medium, and time period. Supplementing these rules are reporting requirements and various other, more nuanced regulations propounded by self-regulatory organizations such as FINRA.

Rule 17a-3 Certain Records

Rule 17a-3 sets forth the various books and records that BDs have to create and maintain. As discussed further below, a review of Rule 17a-3 reveals a broad assortment of records, including, but not limited to, purchase and sale documents, source documents, long/short position documents, business records, associated person records, and/or customer account information.

Inherently, Rule 17a-3 requires BDs to create records accurately. See S.E.C. v. Goble, 682 F.3d 934, 946 (11th Cir. 2012) (“The books and records requirements at § 17(a) of the Exchange Act, 15 U.S.C. § 78q(a), and Rule 17a-3, 17 C.F.R. § 240.17a-3 thereunder, required North American to maintain accurate records” (emphasis added)). Notably, the accuracy requirement applies to all information found in the applicable records, regardless of whether Rule 17a-3 requires such information to be created. See S.E.C. v. Badian, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 64661 (S.D.N.Y. Aug. 22, 2008) (“[E]ven assuming no legal obligation to furnish particular information, there is an obligation upon voluntarily supplying that information, to be truthful.”).

Rule 17a-3 also includes fraud prevention aspects. For example, Rule 17a-3(a) lists detailed information that must be contained in documents relating to sales transactions, such as order tickets and blotters. Regulators will often request these records, which, coupled with the detailed instructions set forth in Rule 17a-3, ensure that they may efficiently identify sales practice violations.

Similarly, Rule 17a-3(a)(6) requires that certain records such as, among other things, transaction orders, contain the time the order was received and executed so that the Commission may thwart fraudulent schemes such as late trading.⁵

Regulators often cite Rule 17a-3 in conjunction with other regulations, such as anti-fraud provisions, when bringing charges against BDs. While generally fraud violations can only be brought against a BD if it acts with scienter, when charging recordkeeping violations, regulators usually have no such requirement. See S.E.C. v. Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc., 837 F. Supp. 587, 610 (S.D.N.Y. 1993) (“Scienter need not be shown to prove a violation of Section 17(a)(1) of the Exchange Act and the rules thereunder”). Thus, Rule 17a-3 provides regulators with a fallback option when there is evidence that a fraud has occurred but evidence of scienter is lacking. See Goble, 682 F.3d at 947 (finding violation of Rule 17a-3 despite the fact that legal requirements for Exchange Act § 10(b) violations were lacking).

However, when there is scienter, Rule 17a-3 provisions may also be used to establish an aiding and abetting violation under Exchange Act Section 20(e).⁶ To impose aiding and abetting liability, the Commission (or self-regulatory body) must show (1) a primary violation of the securities laws, (2) that the aider and abettor had knowledge of the primary violation, and (3) that the aider and abettor provided substantial assistance in the commission of the primary violation.⁷ Aiding and abetting violations are most often used to target individual members of BDs, who may not be the primary violator but nonetheless contributed to the recordkeeping violations. See, e.g., VanCook, 653 F.3d at 141–142 (finding stockbroker aided and abetted recordkeeping violation despite the fact it wasn’t within his job duties to create the records).

Rule 17a-4

Rule 17a-4 specifies the length of time and manner that the records set forth in Rule 17a-3 must be preserved. As set forth in the table below, this rule also requires additional records to be preserved although the specific records are not enumerated in Rule 17a-3. These additional records are predominantly created in the natural course of doing business as BDs and include corporate formation documents, checks, bank statements, audit reports, internal control manuals, and reports made in response to inquiries by governing authorities.

Retention Periods

This Rule was designed to ensure that the Commission can quickly and efficiently obtain access to BDs' books and records. Naturally, the retention time and method of retention turn on the type of records at issue. There are three distinct retention periods:

- Life of the broker-dealer. Includes formational documents of BDs, such as the articles of incorporation.
- Six years from an operative date. Includes customer account records in addition to trading records such as blotters, general ledgers, security position records, and customer ledgers, among other things.
- Three years from an operative date. Includes compliance manuals, associated person records, working papers, powers of attorney, written agreements entered into by the BD, and communications that relate to the BD's business, among other things.

It is important to note that the retention periods do not preempt other non-securities related requirements. Consequently, BDs should not automatically delete records when the retention period lapses before ensuring there are no other legal requirements that mandate their retention.⁸ For example, certain records may need to be kept longer for tax reasons. A full list of the retention periods for each of the records required to be maintained is set forth in the table below.

Method of Preservation

The method of preservation component requires that any records named in Rule 17a-3 be kept in an accessible place. See Rule 17a-3(a) and (b). This provision has been interpreted to mean that the records must be kept in a readily accessible location, such as on the premises or at a nearby location. Additionally, the records must be filed in such a way that they can be easily identified or retrieved. The accessible place requirement lasts for two years, although such records will need to be preserved for longer periods of time to comply with their applicable retention periods.

Medium of Storage

The permissible medium of storage has evolved with technology, and BDs may currently preserve records on electronic storage media. See Rule 17a-4(f). Consistent with its fraud-prevention motives, Rule 17a-4(f) sets forth a variety of conditions designed to ensure the accuracy of the records and to prohibit BDs from falsifying and/or deleting records.⁹ In particular, any electronic storage media must meet the following conditions:¹⁰

- Preserve the records exclusively in a non-rewritable, non-erasable format.
- Verify automatically the quality and accuracy of the storage media recording process.
- Serialize the original and, if applicable, duplicate units of storage media, and time-date for the required period of retention the information placed on such electronic storage media.
- Have the capacity to readily download indexes and records preserved on the electronic storage media to any medium acceptable under Rule 17a-4(f) as required by the Commission or the self-regulatory organizations of which the BD is a member.

Additionally, BDs must notify their examining authority at least 90 days prior to their use of electronic storage media of their intent to do so.

It is important to recognize that Rule 17a-4 sets forth a standard that electronic storage media must satisfy, rather than the type of technology (for example, CD-ROMs) that must be used.¹¹ The standard permits the use of any technology that will preserve records in a format that will prohibit them from being altered or deleted. Systems that only preserve records or mitigate—rather than eliminate—the risk of a record being overwritten are unacceptable. For example, the use of password protection or other extrinsic security controls will not meet the Rule 17a-4 standard because such protections do not, by themselves, prevent a record from being changed or deleted. Any technology that allows a record to be overwritten or not preserved for the appropriate retention period is unacceptable. See North v Smarsh, Inc., 2015 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 162551 (D.D.C. Dec. 4, 2015) (“ESI systems that are vulnerable to the ‘ability to overwrite or erase records stored on these systems’ are ‘non-compliant with Rule 17a-4(f).’”).

Communications

As noted above, Rule 17a-4 also requires BDs to preserve additional records that may not be enumerated in Rule 17a-3. Perhaps most notable is the requirement to preserve “originals of all communications received and copies of all communications sent” relating to the BDs’ “business as such.”¹² In light of the rapid advancements in communication platforms, this provision has proved to be particularly troublesome for BDs, who must remain cognizant that Rule 17a-4 is a standard-based rule that is meant to evolve with technology.

For example, in In the Matter of J.P. Morgan Securities Inc., the Commission emphasized this principle in finding that Rule 17a-4 applies to electronic mail and not just physical documents.¹³ More recently, the Commission and self-regulatory authorities have issued guidance relating to the application of existing rules to communications stemming from the use of social media.¹⁴

Given an ever-changing technological landscape, BDs must be alert to the corresponding influence those changes will have on recordkeeping requirements. New technologies will not be exempt from recordkeeping requirements, and BDs must ensure that they will implement these new technologies while still complying with the established recordkeeping requirements.

Applicable FINRA Rules

Adding to the complex maze of recordkeeping requirements, self-regulatory organizations such as FINRA have also adopted numerous recordkeeping rules. In this regard, FINRA Rules 2210, 3110, 4511, 4513, and 4530 are particularly applicable.

FINRA Rule 2210

FINRA Rule 2210 relates to communications with the public. Within FINRA Rule 2210 is a requirement that BDs maintain all retail and institutional communications for three years and include, among other things, the dates of use and the identity of the principal who approved the communication.¹⁵ All correspondence must be maintained for six years under FINRA Rules 3110 and 4511.¹⁶ Additionally, all communications’ records must be kept in a format and media that comply with Rule 17a-4 under the Exchange Act.

FINRA Rule 2210(f)(3) requires BDs to document the education and training of its associated persons who make public appearances on the BDs’ policies and procedures and to maintain all records.

FINRA Rule 3110: Supervision

FINRA Rule 3110 contains the supervision requirements for BDs. From a broad perspective, FINRA Rule 3110 requires BDs to implement a written supervisory system to ensure that all associated persons of the firm comply with the numerous rules and regulations applicable to BDs. At a minimum, a BD’s supervisory system must provide for the following:¹⁷

- Establishment and maintenance of written procedures
- Designation of an appropriately registered principal with authority to carry out the supervisory responsibilities of the member for each business it engages for which registration as a broker-dealer is required
- Registration and designation as a branch office or an office of supervisory jurisdiction (OSJ) of each location, including the main office
- Designation of one or more appropriately registered principals in each OSJ and one or more appropriately registered representatives or principals in each non-OSJ branch office with authority to carry out the supervisory responsibilities assigned to that office by the BD
- Assignment of each registered person to an appropriately registered representative or principal who shall be responsible for supervising that person’s activities
- Use of reasonable efforts to determine that all supervisory personnel are qualified, either by virtue of experience or training
- Participation of each registered representative and registered principal in an interview or meeting conducted by the designated persons at which compliance matters relevant to the activities of the representative and principal are discussed (to be held at least annually)

Since FINRA wants to ensure that supervisory and inspection responsibilities are properly documented, FINRA Rule 3100 also contains numerous recordkeeping provisions.

FINRA Rule 3100(b)(7) requires a copy of a BD’s written supervisory procedures—encompassing the above-referenced requirements—to be kept and maintained in each OSJ and at each location where supervisory activities are conducted.

FINRA Rule 3100(b)(4) requires a firm to have supervisory procedures to review incoming and outgoing written correspondence and internal communications, including emails, relating to the BDs' business. The registered principal must review correspondence and internal communications, and this review must be documented in writing. Normally, any system for a review of correspondence should identify the following:¹⁸

BDs should not automatically delete records when the retention period lapses before ensuring there are no other legal requirements that mandate their retention.

- Name of the reviewer
- Date of the review
- Firm's actions taken as a result of any significant regulatory issues identified during the review

As noted above, BDs can use automated systems to conduct such review but must be aware of the limitations of those systems and implement additional review procedures to fill any gaps.¹⁹

FINRA Rule 3110(b)(5) requires firms to implement "procedures to capture, acknowledge, and respond to all written (including electronic) customer complaints." While the rule does not explicitly encompass oral complaints, FINRA Regulatory Notice 14-10 has made it clear that BDs should have a mechanism to allow customers to put their complaints in writing. Of course, the failure to address a customer complaint will violate FINRA Rule 2010. FINRA Rule 4513 requires that customer complaints relating to the OSJ be preserved at that OSJ for at least four years.

FINRA Rule 3100(c) requires BDs to conduct an internal inspection that is reasonably designed to detect and prevent violations of applicable laws and regulations. A written record of the date upon which each review and inspection was conducted must be retained.

FINRA Rule 4511

FINRA Rule 4511 clarifies that BDs are obligated to (1) make and preserve books and records in compliance with the Exchange Act and applicable FINRA Rules and (2) preserve the books and records in a format and media that complies with Exchange Act Rule 17a-4.

If the books and records pertain to an account, the retention period is for six years after the date the account is closed; otherwise, the retention period is for six years after the books and records are made.

FINRA Rule 4513

FINRA Rule 4513 requires firms to keep and preserve files of all written customer complaints in each OSJ. This rule covers only complaints that relate to the applicable OSJ and any complaints that relate to activities supervised from that office. Compliance with this Rule can be met by producing the records at the OSJ upon request by FINRA.

FINRA Rule 4513 sets the retention period for customer complaint records at four years, which corresponds to FINRA's commitment to conduct routine examinations at least every four years. Note that this is longer than the retention period under the Exchange Act, which requires complaint records to be preserved for only three years.²⁰

FINRA Rule 4530

FINRA Rule 4530(a) requires BDs to promptly report certain enumerated events to FINRA no later than 30 calendar days after the firm knows, or should have known, of their existence. In general, these events cover disciplinary and legal matters relating to the BD or its associated persons.

FINRA Rule 4530(b) speaks to associated persons and requires BDs to report to FINRA when the BD or an associated person of the firm violates any securities, insurance, commodities, financial, or investment-related laws, rules, regulations, or standards of conduct of any domestic or foreign regulatory body or self-regulatory organization. Again, the time limit for reporting is 30 calendar days after the investigation concludes, or reasonably should conclude.

Under other FINRA and Exchange Act Rules, BDs must preserve the records of any complaints leading to the investigation, as well as records of the investigation itself.

Exchange Act Rule 17a-5's Basic Reporting Rule for BDs

While Rules 17a-3 and Rule 17a-4 provide for the creation and preservation of records, Rule 17a-5 imposes affirmative reporting obligations on BDs.²¹ The reporting requirement is used by the Commission to ensure compliance with, among other things, the net capital rule (Exchange Act Rule 15c3-1).²² This Rule requires BDs to maintain adequate financial resources and a minimum amount of net liquid assets.

Under Rule 17a-5, BDs must calculate and report their net liquid assets and the minimum amount of net liquid assets that they are permitted to have. This provides the Commission with an early warning sign to enable it to take protective measures before a BD collapses.²³

The primary report required under Rule 17a-5 is the Financial and Operational Combined Uniform Single (FOCUS) Report. This report must be filed annually and contain audited financial statements, supporting schedules, and supplemental reports. Additionally, BDs may be required to file certain monthly and/or quarterly reports, as applicable.

Recently, in response to the Madoff scandal and the subsequent enactment of the Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act, the Commission amended the reporting requirements of Rule 17a-5.²⁴ The new amendments require BDs to file new types of reports with the SEC and require clearing and carrying BDs to allow the Commission to access audit documentation.

Table of Records and Retention Periods
