Jonathan is the regional practice lead for the firm's Labor & Employment Department for the Princeton office. He handles employment litigation and counsels clients on a variety of employment issues, including leave entitlement, separation and severance, litigation avoidance, employee handbooks and wage and hour issues.

He also has experience in forensic analysis, with a particular emphasis on investigating and litigating claims of misappropriation of trade secrets.

Jonathan represents clients in state and federal court as well as administrative agencies, such as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. He has also defended unfair labor practice charges before the New Jersey Public Employment Relations Commission and the National Labor Relations Board.

Surviving the OSHA Inspection

There are few things more disruptive and potentially damaging to an employer than an OSHA inspection of the employer's property. Whether the OSHA inspection concerns imminent danger, catastrophes and fatal accidents, employee complaints, a programmed inspection or follow-up inspection, properly handling an OSHA inspection is a crucial part of conducting any business.
